

Access Policy for Federal Depository Library Materials

In The Collections of Five Colleges of Ohio

---

As federal depository libraries, we offer free access to federal government information disseminated through the Federal Depository Library Program to the campus community and the general public. All information provided through the FDLP is available to any library user free of fees or other restrictions such as age. All security measures are consistent with FDLP guidelines and requirements. Depository Users are expected to follow the same behavior guidelines as those required of our students, faculty and staff. Library users will be required to present no identification except to check out library materials.

The staff of each depository library will provide appropriate reference services, training, and help guides/documentation of tangible and Web-based products for the general public.

Circulation policies for tangible materials distributed through the Depository Library Program can be found in the circulation policies of the individual libraries.

We take seriously our obligations under the provisions of the Americans with Disabilities Act and make every effort to provide appropriate access.

(Final: October 31, 2007)